In this study, silver nanoparticles have been synthesized using the leaf extract of Eucalyptus urophylla, which was used because the leaf extract was found to contain many bioactive compounds such as phenolics, flavonoids, and tannins. The effect of the biosynthesized AgNPs on the bacteria (Escherichia coli, Pseudomonas aureofaciens, Bacillus subtilis, and Staphylococcus aureus) and the pathogen fungus (Botrytis cinerea) has been studied. The results showed that these nanoparticles were synthesized with good size and spherical morphology and were stable over time. The antimicrobial activity was measured by the zone of inhibition method. The greatest activity against Staphylococcus aureus was measured with AgNPs at a concentration of 1 mg/mL. The antimicrobial mechanism has been studied by a fluorescence microscopy. The antibacterial mechanism was found to be mainly caused by the cell membrane damages, whereas the fungicidal mechanism was dependent on the generation of reactive oxygen species.Q: How to perform non-linear fit of two datasets with support on the boundary I have two data sets that I want to perform a non-linear fit. The issue is that the points on both datasets support on the boundary (i.e., datetime interval = datetime limit of the data). The new data that I want to fit are only part of the previous data set (I am basically removing the end of the data
