1. 1. Sample Image: Images that don't look good out of the box are an easy sell to beginning users. To help set the scene, include a photo of the type of person that is the target audience. 2. 2. Aesthetic/Subjective Criteria: It is important that the image represents a characteristic that each target audience identifies as a "good" feel. Users can look at the image and identify a feel that they like or dislike. Identifying the feel can help them narrow their choices to the most appropriate image. 3. 3. Attitude/Ethic: This is the second criterion. In addition to aesthetic feel, it is important that the image prompts the viewer to have a positive attitude towards the type of person who will be viewed as "good" in the ad. For example, people who are happy or appear to be enjoying themselves may be viewed as a good person in this case. 4. 4. Affect: This is the third criterion. If the image has a person who looks cool, this is a good candidate as well. In addition, faces that look natural or pretty are easy to identify as a "good person." 5. 5. Style: As you can see, with this test, you have narrowed the field to one kind of person who people think would be good. Now you have to choose a style. In this case, the style is casual clothing that would be worn by college students. Step 2: Choose Your Artist Some people think of an artist when they think of a photographer. A photographer will shoot a picture, develop the film, edit the photos into slides, and then make prints. An artist does all of that, with a little help from Photoshop. 1. 1. Aesthetics: For those who are artistic, look for an image that is not only "good," but looks like it would have been created by an artist. You are not looking for something pretty; you are looking for an image that looks like an actual piece of artwork. 2. 2. Subject: This could be an interesting or entertaining image. Notice the subtle humor in this image. 3. 3. Attitude: This image is fun. 4. 4. Affect: This image shows cool. 5. 5. Style: There are many ways to create this

That's because in November, voters will have to decide between her and Democrat Mark Kelly, a former astronaut. Kelly is a Marine veteran and Iraq War veteran. "I know what Mark is all about, and from a conservative standpoint I can help him carry that district," she told Fox News host Fox News host Ainsley Earhardt. McSally, for her part, said she does not like to use the "D" word. "I don't want to say Democrat," she told Earhardt. McSally's Republican boss says President Trump is putting the pressure on McSally to win. "The president has kept a really strong and constant presence in this district," McSally's Senate boss said. McSally was a former Air Force pilot. But when critics say Trump's policies are bad for veterans, she says, "at the end of the day, the Air Force loves our veterans and always will." But in a packed-to-capacity crowd, Trump supporter Eleni Gioumour said she's thinking of switching teams, not at McSally's rivals, but to the Republicans. "McSally is a pro-Trump, pro-military, law-and-order Republican," she said. "She will take care of our veterans. Kelly will take care of illegal immigrants.") + 2 + 3 - 3) t o t h e f o r m u + s * r a

Archaeologists discover 5,500-year-old 'Indiana Jones'-style relics in Israel Sarah Bubanich | IndyStar Show Caption Hide Caption Archaeologists discover 'Indiana Jones'-style artifacts in Israel Archaeologists have discovered artifacts with scenes that resemble a famous scene from the Indiana Jones franchise. The oldest human remains in Israel found to date are a set of artifacts so ancient that the archaeologists who found them are comparing them to Indiana Jones' treasure chest. The tools, parts of a bead necklace and stone bead, are from Stone Age Israel and date back some 5,500 years. "As we find similar tools in the Levant — places such as Syria, Lebanon and Jordan — there is some overlap in the number of artifacts and the types of artifacts that are found in these areas," said Galina Arina, an archaeologist with the Israel Antiquities Authority (IAA) who leads the team that discovered the relics. "So we are confident that these tools were produced by the early inhabitants of [Israel's] highlands." The finds were discovered during a dig in Kebara, a region located northeast of Jerusalem, Arina said. Kebara is home to a temple that contains some of the oldest adobe homes and structures in Israel, and the artifacts unearthed there provide details about the type of lives the first inhabitants of the area led. What happened in those first five millennia isn't exactly clear. The artifacts were discovered in 2011 during a dig that archaeologists had undertaken in an area about 4 km away from the temple, in order to prepare the land for a new development. A year later, the team's research director, Yossi Garfinkel, spotted a series of materials that looked like adobe — the mud-like substance used by ancient builders to create bricks. The mud was covered by stone that indicated that it was used as a part of a wall. But the discovery caught archaeologists by surprise. The team had always assumed that the tools the archaeologists had found were quite recent, from the 12th to the 16th century BCE, when people from the Philistine and Israelite kingdoms lived in the area. It was hard to pinpoint exactly when the tools were made because of the richness of the area and the depth of the dig, but the layer of stone that covered the tools is believed to be from as far back as 4,200 years BCE. "The artifacts don�
