Masters of the World continues Trotter's mission to add to the world of roleplaying games, saying: "We wanted to give players a more complete experience. The interesting thing about the game that nobody else has done is that our system allows the players to pick their governmental system, and then the game provides them with a map and all of the information on what's in the world. They are given all of the names of the historical people, places, political, military and economical things about the world, and the game presents it to them in a very nice, useful and easy-to-use, not cheesy way." Masters of the World features 175 playable countries with numerous leader types. Players can compete in the international political spectrum in a race to attain the highest spot by guiding their country to victory. Every nation has different policies, prestige levels, strengths and weaknesses, which can affect their game performance. Players can also participate in rallies and parades, which play an integral role in political development. Masters of the World has recently gained attention from media outlets in the U.S. such as Fox News and National Public Radio. However, there is a lot of detail involved in this game. This is one of the first games I have played where there are so many details involved in the game. Now, you can go to any part of the world and see information about the country. In addition, you get information about the players actions or decisions that will affect the rest of the world. As you can see from the video you get a simple map of a country and can click on any part of the map and get more detail. You can play in real-time or save the game at any time. This game is a very serious simulation of the real world. You can play the game in single player mode, link up with your friends in multiplayer mode, or try to become the World Leader. 5ec8ef588b
